How we operate

We aim to operate with pseudonymous identifiers where feasible (for example, wallet addresses and technical logs). This is not anonymity: public blockchain activity can be linkable.

What we process

- Public on-chain facts you cause us to display (addresses/ENS, amounts, timestamps, derived leaderboard positions).
- Basic technical logs for operations and security (internet protocol address, timestamps, requested addresses, headers), page views, device/browser type, performance and uptime metrics.
- Cookies or local storage for preferences (for example, theme), rate-limiting, and performance.

How we use it

To run, secure, and improve the Project; display public on-chain facts; detect abuse and outages; and produce aggregated statistics. We may use privacy-minded hosting, content delivery, analytics, error logging, and uptime providers. We do not sell personal data.

Choices and retention

If an analytics tool supports opt-out or “Do Not Track,” we aim to honour it where feasible. You can clear cookies or local storage in your browser. Logs are kept only as long as needed for operations, security, and legal duties, then deleted or aggregated.
